21. IVORY-BILLED WOODPECKER
(Campephilus principalis)

This splendid bird is the largest of our Woodpeckers and the most striking in appearance. The crest of the female lacks the bright scarlet which distinguishes her mate. Once a common bird in the southern states, it is much to be deplored that this fine Woodpecker is now threatened with extinction. No other bird can get at the destructive wood-boring grubs which the Ivory-bill destroys in great numbers. It nests high up in the most inaccessible trees. From three to five pointed, highly porcellaneous eggs are laid early in March and sometimes in February.

FOR THE GOOD OF ALL,
DO NOT DESTROY THE BIRDS.
